EXTERNAL FUNDING

CURRENTLY FUNDED APPLICATIONS

R01 AA029125, Casement (PI)	04/01/2022 - 02/28/2027
NIH/NIAAA	$1,750,000 (estimated TDC)

Mechanisms of Risky Alcohol Use in Young Adults: Linking Sleep Duration and Timing to Reward- and Stress-Related Brain Function.

This research will use biobehavioral approaches to generate understanding about the linkages between stressful life events, sleep duration and timing, and alcohol use in young adults, with a long-term aim of developing effective preventative interventions for alcohol use disorders.

Role: Co-Investigator

ADVANCE supplement to R37 AA012547 (Larimer)	09/15/2022-08/31/2023
NIH/NIAAA

Social Norms & Skills Training: Motivating Campus Change

The objective of this Advancing Prevention Research for Health Equity (ADVANCE; NOT-OD-22-159) administrative supplement is to enhance inclusion of students with minoritized sexual and gender (SGM) identities in the Motivating Campus Change personalized feedback intervention (PFI) trial. Specifically, Phase 1 will recruit 300 additional SGM participants and assess perceived drinking norms for SGM students (as a reference group) and identification with other normative reference groups. Phase 1 will also assess Pride celebrations as a potential high-risk drinking event and gather more nuanced information on drinking context. Phase 2 will gather new quantitative and qualitative data using rapid prototyping interviews to evaluate acceptability and relevance of existing PFI materials and adapt materials as necessary to enhance PFI effects for SGM students, which will be assessed using an RCT design.

Social Norms & Skills Training: Motivating Campus Change

This study evaluates a multi-component online personalized feedback intervention (PFI) with simultaneous delivery (i.e., all components at once) versus sequential delivery (i.e., individual components are delivered one at a time to minimize attention demands for each component) and seeks to enhance magnitude and duration of effects through adding text-message-based boosters to address specific high-risk drinking events during the year following intervention.

Duck Deep Dive Evaluation

This project evaluates the efficacy of a manualized curriculum in reducing the incidence of sexual violence, especially incidents associated with off-campus parties hosted by fraternity chapters. The curriculum integrates a specific focus on how alcohol use is related to associated issues of sexual consent, bystander intervention efficacy, increased risk for perpetration, and harmful aftereffects for survivors, as well as implications for supportive peer response of survivors.

Examining Substance Use, Depressive Symptoms, and Suicidality among Racially and Ethnically Diverse Sexual and Gender Minorities: An Intersectional Approach to Understanding Health Disparities

The objective of this study is to elucidate specific risk and protective factors among sexual and gender minority subgroups that will be used as pilot data for subsequent NIH applications to develop and evaluate interventions to reduce health disparities among racially and ethnically diverse sexual and gender minorities.

Personalized mobile app: Challenging alcohol expectancies to reduce high-risk drinking and consequences.

The purpose of this research is to develop a mobile phone intervention for 2- and 4-year college students with real-time feedback using individuals' daily expectancies, use, and consequences, building on two NIAAA-endorsed strategies for addressing high-risk college student drinking:

challenging alcohol-related social expectancies, traditionally done through in-vivo experimental designs, and electronic personalized feedback.

Choosing to regulate: An fMRI Investigation of autonomous vs. controlled self-regulation and substance use in late adolescence

This project aims to validate the use of food craving reappraisal as a developmentally appropriate model of appetitive self-regulation in the context of substance use and characterize the ability of autonomous and controlled regulation to predict substance use trajectories during the transition to college, above and beyond other established risk factors.
